Trace Moves Of Girl Felled By Sleep Pills

While a brilliant Smith College senior was recovering from an overdose of sleeping pills, police were seeking today to determine whether the pretty 20-year-old girl, missing for two days, had spent all of the time in the tiny cellar recess in which she was found semi-conscious.

SYLVIA PLATH
Found in Cellar

Sylvia Plath, Elmwood rd., Wellesley, was discovered lying behind a pile of kindling wood on a narrow ledge between the basement and a porch of her home. Beside her were a water container and eight sleeping pills in a bottle which originally contained 50 tablets.

Although admitting it was possible Sylvia had been in the cellar throughout one of the most intensive searches in Wellesley's history, police pointed out that she wore different clothing than when she was last seen.

CONDITION GOOD

She was reported in satisfactory condition at Newton-Wellesley Hospital, where she was taken after she was removed from the tiny recess by Police Chief Robert MacBey and Patrolman Theodore McGlone. The officers had to crawl through a narrow opening to reach the girl.

MacBey said it was not determined whether Sylvia was in the cellar all the time or had returned home Monday and hid behind the pile of kindling that blocked the cellar ledge.

The girl's moanings led to her discovery by her brother, Warren, 18, after their grandmother, Mrs. Aurelia Shober, 60, heard guttural sounds in the cellar and traced them to the woodpile.

WAS "GOING ON HIKE"

The girl, who topped the scholastic list in the junior class at Smith last year, had been missing since Monday when she left a note for her mother, Mrs. Aurelia S. Plath, a Boston University professor, that she was going for a hike.

All woods in the Wellesley area were searched by State and local police and scores of volunteers. Also, officers contacted Smith College students throughout the nation in hope they could furnish clues to her whereabouts.

It was feared the girl was on the verge of a nervous collapse as a result of despondency over the fact that she believed she was no longer able to write the poetry and fiction which gained her a national reputation.

Nab 2 Youths In Holdup of Pony Wagon

Two Everett teen-agers today were arrested and allegedly confessed to a $20 robbery of the 17-year-old driver of a pony ice cream wagon a few hours earlier.

The pair, one a former pony ice cream wagon operator, is accused of trailing Joseph Grover of Walnut st., Everett, and his cart to secluded East Elm st., Everett, and forcing him to surrender his day's receipts.

The older suspect, 17, is scheduled for appearance later today in Malden District Court. His accomplice, 16, is to appear in juvenile court sometime this week.

Grover said one of the robbers was masked and carried a knife.

In the excitement, the pony became panicky and took off toward Revere Beach pkwy. An unidentified pedestrian stopped him and returned him to the young holdup victim.

ALFRED VELLUCCI
Announces Candidacy

Vellucci Again Seeks School Seat

School Committeeman Alfred Vellucci, 19 Roosevelt Towers, Cambridge, active member of the independent majority of the school board, has announced his candidacy for re-election.

For months it has been rumored that Vellucci, might seek election to the city council, but his filing of nomination papers for the school committee, followed by his formal announcement, ended the controversy over his possible councilor fight.

In releasing his re-election campaign notice, Vellucci stated that "this should end the rumors that I am city council minded at this time. I set out to do a good job in the public schools for the children, the parents, and the taxpayers and, although I have accomplished much in the right direction there is still the job to be finished.

His announcement follows:

The interested citizens in our city are invited to visit any of our school buildings to get first-hand information on what has been done to give their Children for better schools.

For information on what type of representation has been rendered by me since my election to the school board on January 1, 1952 kindly talk to your child or to employees of the school department.

"Parents will please note that all school buildings, with the exception of the proposed new schools, are, or have been, under repairs since Jan. 1, 1952. A new gymnasium at High and Latin School (the dust was removed from the forgotten plans) will soon go under construction. Equipped with two swimming pools, health suites, etc., and built as a memorial to our veterans, will be a gymnasium second to none and a god-send to our children.

"Plans are being made for the construction of two new modern grammar schools, to be built concurrently with the war memorial.

"I have fought for and succeeded in obtaining the following: new band uniforms, better hot lunch program, police protection at dangerous intersections, better schools, better health facilities, elimination of bleacher hazard at Russell Field, better teacher - parent understanding, lower price on milk served to children in classrooms, installation of modern fluorescent lighting in classrooms, better student-school committee acquaintance, up-to-date text books, complete eradication of dingy classrooms—supplemented with bright and fresh atmosphere, remodeling of shower bath systems to protect health of student body, landscaping of school grounds to create pleasant surroundings, better employe - school committee understanding, employment of personnel regardless of race, creed or color."

Seek Motive In Vt. Man's Fire Suicide

SHARON, Vt.—Despite a tentative finding of suicide in the macabre death of handyman Frank Krivak, 40, investigators questioned several persons today in an effort to learn why he should have burned himself to death almost on the eve of his marriage.

Krivak's charred body, lashed to a rafter in the attic of an abandoned schoolhouse, was discovered by his brother, John, who saw smoke coming from the building and went in to investigate.

Of particular interest to detectives was a report that several days two masked men warned Krivak not to go through with his planned marriage to Marion Minor, 32, of Windsor, this coming Saturday.

She, as well as several other persons who were close to Krivak, were questioned by police, but could throw no light on his death; nor could they give any reason why he should have committed suicide.

The apparent lack of motive for Krivak's death was one of the more puzzling aspects of the case, but State's Atty. Lewis E. Springer said the probe would continue despite the finding by state pathologist Dr. Joseph Spelman.

Springer said there had been no trouble between Krivak and his intended bride, and declared that reports which had her under "protective custody" were without foundation. He said she voluntarily submitted to interrogation in an effort to clear up the mystery of her fiance's death.

Springer quoted Dr. Spelman as saying that Krivak apparently died of "inhalation of heat and from fire he apparently set himself."

According to Dr. Spelman, Krivak poured out some gasoline in the attic, tied a rope around his waist and attached it to the rafters so that he had still free use of his arms, and touched off the gasoline.

The pathologist said the handyman's left leg was burned through between the calf and the knee, and the other leg was badly charred. There was no evidence, however, that he had been injured before he was burned, Dr. Spelman reported.

He theorized that Krivak apparently intended not only to destroy himself but the building as well.
