Two members of the expedition, descending the treacherous, blizzard-swept 23,250-foot peak, were injured seriously and are suffering from frostbite. They were identified as Robert W. Craig, a ski instructor from Colorado Springs, and physicist George R. Bell of Los Alamos, N. M.

Buried in Mountains

Gilkey, a son of Dr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Gilkey of Ames, Iowa, was killed while descending from Camp 8 to Camp 7 and later was buried in the Karakoram Mountains with a 10-foot high stone marking his grave.

(In Ames, Gilkey's parents said the leader of the expedition, Dr. Charles Houston of Exeter, N. H., cabled them this account: "Arthur developed thrombo phlebitis (inflammation brought on by frostbite) at 25,000 feet prior to summit attempt and died during desperate attempt to bring him down which nearly cost lives of party. All of us send heartfelt sympathy. Full letter follows.")

It was the sixth expedition to be defeated by Godwin-Austen, second highest summit in the world and tallest peak still unconquered. Everest, the highest at more than 29,000 feet, was conquered last May. Godwin-Austen stands in the Western Himalayas at the edge of the central Asian-Karakoram range. It is named after the eldest son of Robert Godwin-Austen, English Geologist. The name "K2" developed from the peak's topographical reference number in early charts.

Dr. Houston, 42, who calls himself a "small town doctor," has led attempts on K2 twice before.

Other members of the team are Robert Bates, a teacher at Exeter; Dee Molenaar, photographer, Colorado Springs; Peter Schoening, chemical engineer, Seattle, Wash.; Capt. H. R. A. Streather, of the British army; and Pakistan army Col. M. Ataulah.

Missing College Girl Found Alive In Cellar Of Home

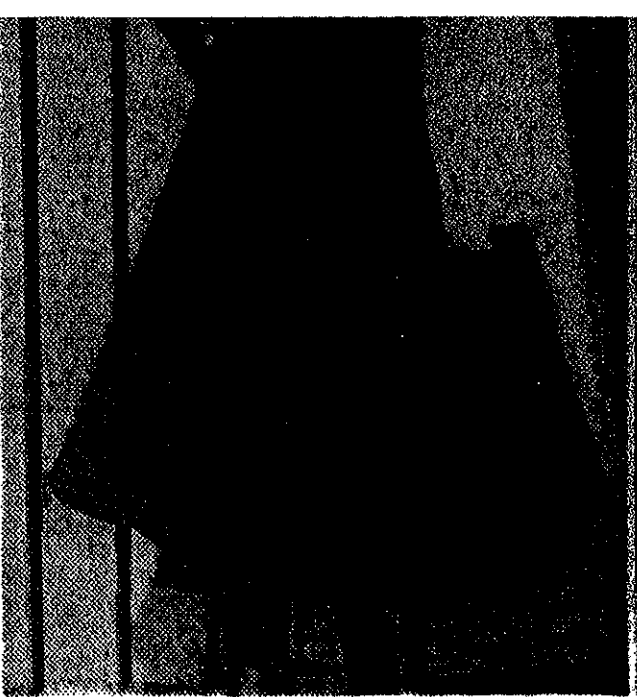

WELLESLEY, Mass., Aug. 26 —(INS) — Brilliant, 20-year-old Sylvia Plath, the Smith College honor student who vanished two days ago, this afternoon was found alive but semi-conscious from an overdose of sleeping pills in the cellar of her home.

A nearby empty bottle, which contained 50 sleeping pills, and a jar which had a few drops of water, were found nearby.

Sylvia was found by her brother, Warren, 18, as a 100-man searching party, aided by State Police bloodhounds, scoured the wooded areas around Wellesley, including the rocky ledge area.

She was taken to Newton-Wellesley Hospital where her condition was reported as fairly good, although she remained in a semi-conscious condition.

Police Chief Robert McBey said it had not been determined whether Sylvia had been in the cellar all the time, or if she had returned home late Monday night and had gone there.

INTRODUCING FALL 1953: A parade of fashion's highlights for fall was presented to a capacity audience at Town and Country Clothes, 982 Farmington Avenue, on Wednesday night and will be repeated again this evening. Among the many attractive dresses modeled were the two featured above. 'Sweet Talking' Europe Whirls By Cuba's Self-Styled Sugar

LONDON, Aug. 26 (AP) — Luis Rodriguez Acosta, Cuba's self-styled sugar ambassador, wound up his "sweet talking" European campaign today.

A little Havana cab driver, Acosta has whirled through eight European countries telling people to eat more Cuban sugar. He said he tried, but failed, to crack the iron curtain on a peace mission to Soviet Premier Georgi Malenkov. Flying to U. S.

Acosta leaves London for Washington by plane tomorrow night. He plans to present President Eisenhower a five-pound bag of sugar, a box of Havana cigars and a cotton-hemp wrapped Cuban flag. Acosta, 44, explains: "I represent nobody except the peace and sugar."

But he distinguished himself in London Monday by being the only man thrown out of the 50-nation U. N.-sponsored International Sugar conference.

Scatters Sugar

Be-medaled and carrying sugar-crammed traveling bag labeled "Sugar Ambassador of Cuba" Acosta seated himself in the public gallery to watch the delegates below sign a provisional agreement. He started scattering the gave him a huge "Moscow" which cost $200, a belt, and 20 cans of dines.

According to Acosta, 20 days he lived on dines a day, but plenty of sugar—
